Q: determine what number an object is representing in a string? I have a string like this:

844344331248443443312484434433124844344331248443443312484434433124844344 I need to determine what number these are (and get rid of them). I was thinking of using Integer.parseInt() and then a charAt() to try to determine what each number represents. The string could vary in length, and could be any number of numbers. Also I can't use any built in methods or libraries. A: You can split the string and then check the first number. If it's a numeric character then it's a number. If it's not then the string doesn't follow the pattern you expect. It started with just one game, and now there are five: The OHL's London Knights are fighting for their fourth straight Presidents' Cup, and three of those four cups they've come up short, battling Rochester for the ninth and final rubber match. It began on Oct. 11 when London recorded its first win over the top-ranked Americans since the 2007-08 season, delivering a 7-0 home win over Harvard. The Knights piled on seven more goals in the second period, matching their season total. The Harvard game was the second meeting of the series, the first between the OHL's top two teams. London won, 6-1, at the Knights' London Forum en route to the season title in 2008-09. Advertisement Rochester, the highest-ranked team in the League going into the Series, had the easiest quarterfinal series of the Group 1 teams, with no losses en route to its 8-0 victory. The puck dropped at a frenetic pace at the Knights' Paramount Center on Friday, with the crowd of 15,000 getting a good look at both teams and promising to be loud. But the crowd was by no means the focal point on the ice. "When you're up here, you get really nervous. There's no time to relax. It's a good crowd, but they're also talking," said Knights left wing Jordan Malmstrom, after his team's first period. "You're trying to find your linemates, you're trying to find the net." And they did, notching five first-

Q: Running Event driven Workflow I am trying to run an event driven workflow but getting a little confused on how to configure the "Selection Event". I've googled and searched but can't seem to find a clear, concise, example for how to do this. I have a workflow with a list selection step to select a record, a workflow action to move it to different list, and a workflow action to run through a "From" and "To" lookup table. I run into an error when the workflow is trying to save changes to the list. I get the error "Error on Save Workflow Configuration setting the workflow cannot be found." There is a little more description here which does mention "Workflow" on page 19. Can someone tell me what this workflow is and how to properly execute it? A: Workflows can be run in either a synchronous or asynchronous execution model. To run a workflow synchronously in a list, you have to use the "Run Workflow when item is selected" button on the list view settings. If you have a workflow and list type that supports asynchronous execution, the workflow will run when the change has been made to the list. What you need to do is to change the synchronous execution rule to "When This List Item is selected". If your list is on-premises and uses SharePoint in-place upgrade feature, this can be done in the web front-end by accessing the list view settings. You can find the "Run Workflow when this item is selected" button here: Or on the list view page: If You Want To Work In The World's No. 1 Online Retailer...
