Ariel, the six-year-old orca at the centre of a public protest campaign against captivity in the US, gave birth to her first calf a few days ago. The calf was spotted by scientists and aquarists over the weekend. The mother was seen encouraging the calf to feed by rubbing her body around him. The calf was spotted near the edge of the water at SeaWorld, on the Gulf coast of Florida, by aerial drones and a camera on the tank used to house the orcas. After a failed attempt to feed it, the orca was seen beneath a plastic sheet. "It's a giant kick," said SeaWorld Sea Rescue's Chris Bullard told BBC News. The calf "isn't especially huge," but is "healthy and alert" and is being observed closely, he said. The calf will be named later. The orca is part of a social pod with five other orcas, the youngest of which is also known as Ariel. Ariel was purchased by SeaWorld from a marine park in Russia in 1999, when she was
