To evaluate the possibility that mitochondrial DNA (mtDNA) copy number in the peripheral blood cells in patients with systemic sclerosis (SSc) is decreased. A total of 21 SSc patients and 6 controls were included in the study. Peripheral blood cells were analyzed for the copy numbers of mtDNA by real-time PCR. There was a significant decrease in the copy numbers of the mtDNA in the SSc patients than the control group (0.96 +/- 0.12 vs. 1.30 +/- 0.30, P = 0.04). Patients with shorter duration of the disease had a higher copy number of mtDNA than those with longer duration of the disease (1.01 + -0.20 vs. 1.21 + -0.35, P = 0.02). This study shows that copy number of mtDNA is decreased in patients with SSc. Our data are consistent with the hypothesis that decreased copy number of mtDNA in the peripheral blood cells could play a role in the pathogenesis of the SSc.November 20, 2017 I'm Back!
