If you like this software, you can: by the average genius or maverick that you get in a committee like the GMU-CTA board of directors. All this talk about investments in Silicon Valley makes me really wish that some of you would read the book that I highly recommend. My cousin, Fred, is a product of the era of high innovation. His eyes used to light up when I talked about the new-found high level of prosperity in the late '60s and early '70s. He's looked out his window on the empty lot behind his house for the last few years. "Hey kid," he asked, "who is going to build a house here?" You've got to get out of that mindset. Economic growth is fine; but it's not the only driver of innovation, prosperity, and prosperity-enhancing jobs. People are inventing new products, solving new problems, creating new technologies, and solving all sorts of social problems. I just wish some of the media and politicians would stop calling the recent innovators just "inventors" when they're doing great work that has a significant impact on the future of our country and the world. It's time to stop calling them "makers" and "inventors" and start referring to them as "innovators." We need to start using the right word, and it starts with I. This is why I'm so disappointed in Congress' lack of action, and why I keep trying to support the few innovators and
