What's new in Bone's Cafe:

is the home of “The Best Breakfast in Chicago.” Known as the place where Al Capone was arrested for bootlegging, in 1924 the diner kept up a double life operating as a “white joint” during Prohibition. The building dates from the late 1800s, and in early May is marked with the historic site application (link here) that earned the firm of Alvord, Cook & Grabers of Cleveland, Ohio, the Chicago Preservation League Award. At the time, Chicago adopted an ordinance which made it illegal to sell liquor within 500 yards of a church, monument or school. “Bone's Cafe” was partly in the buffer zone, and permitted to draw in restaurant clientele. Wedway stood out from the other Capone associates because of his love for classical music, including 19th century European composers. He owned an opulent home in Detroit which he used as a spa. As a young man he studied engineering at the University of Michigan. One occasion, police raided his house, discovering a ricin factory in his cellar. "Apricot tree" (code name for ricin) proved to contain the toxin. He was charged with operating a complex for manufacturing an intoxicating liquor. In March 1926, he was sentenced to 99 years in prison. Wedway served 15 years, but influence behind the scenes saw him paroled. Ten years after Wedway's release, after the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment, he agreed to help keep the "white joint" running, on one condition: that he have nothing to do with gambling. After suffering a heart attack in 1929, he went back to Detroit and opened a new, legal bar. Bone's Cafe also reopened and kept its name after Prohibition. A customer named Mrs. Morris, explained the location of Bone
