Impaired emotion processing and limbic-cortical dysfunction have been associated with schizophrenia, and brain-imaging studies have shown that the ventro-lateral prefrontal cortex is involved in emotional processing. We investigated the relation between neural correlates of emotional processing and disease-related measures in schizophrenia. Eighty-seven schizophrenic patients and 60 healthy controls were studied with functional magnetic resonance imaging during performance of a computer-based emotional-discrimination task with a range of emotional stimuli. Schizophrenic patients differed from healthy controls in their activation of the ventro-lateral prefrontal cortex when processing emotional stimuli. Significant correlations were found between changes in ventro-lateral prefrontal cortex activation and measures of disease-related symptoms. Reduced activity in the ventro-lateral prefrontal cortex was associated with greater illness severity, more positive symptoms, and worse performance

The insurer must show that its denial of coverage was prompted by a reasonable investigation of the facts. Eastern Fireproofing v. Hanover Insurance Co., supra, 250 Ga. at 383, 297 S.E.2d 472. Cooper's complaint, as we have seen, alleged several grounds for his recovery. He alleged that the accident was caused by the negligent operation of the insured vehicle in that: (1) the driver's foot slipped off the brake pedal and the vehicle moved forward at an excessive rate of speed; and (2) the driver was distracted by the radio, making him unable to see the brake lights. On appeal, however, Cooper makes no assertion that the car's movement was due to a brake pedal slip or to a driver's inattention to the brake lights. Nor does he contend that the owner of the car was liable for the accident. He contends instead that the owner, through the named driver, occupied a position of special relationship, that this relationship was terminated by the owner's withdrawal of the driver, and that the relationship continued only because of the driver's continued presence. We find nothing in the language of the policy which would support this argument, and we cannot see how it could be. Cooper does not contend that, under the terms of the policy, the owner was required to indemnify the named driver, nor does he contend that the named driver was an agent of the insurer, but it does not appear that any such contention can be made. From a reading of the policy, it appears that the named driver was a permissive user only, not an agent or employee of the owner. Therefore, there was no special relationship for the purpose of establishing a duty on the part 648931e174
