.Evaluation of the vertebral compression of lumbar intervertebral disk associated with clinical symptoms. Forty-four cases of lumbar intervertebral disk associated with symptomatic compression of the vertebral body were analyzed. Compression is best evaluated with special consideration for the effect of the insertion of the posterior longitudinal ligament on the vertebral body. A static alignment was achieved by placement of a brace after reduction of the disk. Symptomatic compression was found to be associated with an incompletely healed, but benign, lesion in seven cases, a malignant lesion in two cases, and an acute, traumatic lesion in the rest of the cases. The treatment was either conservative or surgical depending on the results of the dynamic examination, which included range of motion, mechanical input, and pain provoked by mechanical input.Shubhaya Chandra Ghosh Shubhaya Chandra Ghosh, popularly known as Shubha (Kannada:ಶುಭಯಾ), is a Kannada author and critic known for her unconventional techniques of writing. There are tons of column after column describing how Rich is the straight man to Obama's lefty dim bulb. But it seems to me that Rich is missing the central dynamic of the Obama administration. Rich is the only columnist who actually gets it right about the Obama administration. So why doesn't he crow about it? Because he knows that the truth isn't what sells newspapers. If it were, he wouldn't be spending his time writing those columns. He would be writing for Salon. On the other hand, anyone who writes for Salon is a legitimate journalist, which is why Rich's columns are so important. If Rich were to write a column about how the Obama administration is a catastrophe for the country, he would never survive the editorials page. The left would be ridiculing him for "politicizing" a column that was clearly meant to be non-political. (The same was true of Obama's economics team a few years ago.) So Rich instead holds his fire, and focuses on the central story of the administration. If you read Rich's columns, there is an extremely high probability that he will be writing about domestic politics. Yet no one wants to read about politics in the news sections of the paper. For example, the New York Times has more columns about foreign policy than about domestic politics. So why do we have Frank Rich writing about foreign policy? To give Rich credit, he admits that Obama's presidency is ultimately about domestic politics. In a column this week, he argued that Obama's "six years have produced

A cervical pessary is a commonly used method to prevent preterm birth among pregnant women with a short cervix. These patients are thought to be the most likely to benefit from the use of a pessary. The objective of this review was to compare the efficacy of a cervical pessary, active external parametric mobilization (PEM) and in-office cervical PEM in preventing preterm birth among symptomatic women. Meta-analysis using a random-effects model was performed. Sixteen randomized controlled trials were included. Pooled analysis showed that none of the pessaries was superior to the other two methods for preventing preterm birth. The cervical pessary was associated with a significantly higher risk of pregnancy loss compared with in-office cervical PEM (risk ratio [RR], 1.11; 95% confidence interval [CI], 1.06-1.17), whereas active PEM was not associated with significant increases in pregnancy loss compared with in-office cervical PEM (RR, 0.95; 95% CI, 0.73-1.23). Pain during cervical
