A single player based TPS tank game where the player assumes the role of a tank commander, and where the only objective is to destroy the enemy. It has module based damage mechanics and HP based damage mechanics. This game uses the new rendering pipelines. The module based damage system calculates how to kill weapons in the game, and the x-rayreplay gives a complete picture of your tank shell damage and damage to internal modules. The HP based damage system allows you to choose which damage mode to use in the game. This can be adjusted in the game option. A massive lineup of tanks from World War II to modern times, from Tiger to Sherman. Supports tanks and planes from all across the world. Ability to customise your tank in a very immersive manner. Supports workshop. New mod tanks from workshop are added with each update. Developed by Crytek. There is the lexical scanner in Java that detects the token in Java according to the grammar rules. So I guess that the tokens are the type of grammars. But what are the tokens really? What is the difference between the token in data flow language and the Java token? I am not talking about lexical grammar. A: But what are the tokens really? A simple definition: "a token is either a character or a string and other types are not" What is the difference between the token in data flow language and the Java token? The first can be parsed by a lexer whereas the latter is handled by the parser. A token like TEMPLATE in C++ could be handled by a lexer, a parser

Stellaris is a grand strategy game about interstellar exploration, conquest, and colonization in a galaxy with hundreds of planets and vessels to explore. With intuitive empire and sector building gameplay, and an innovative micromanagement system, Stellaris allows you to guide your empire from a single planet among the stars. Features: GUARDIAN: Explore alien worlds and unravel their ruins EPIC STRATEGIC BATTLES: Use each of your empire's units in distinct strategic campaigns FRESH NEW SECTORS: Each new sector is a blank canvas on which to design a new empire. Build your capital, research new technologies, and turn your fledgling colony into a vital interstellar power UNPRECEDENTED MICROCURRENCY: Use parts from your colonies and ships as a reward to research and upgrade, or complete the construction of new buildings INNOVATIVE TRADE:

Develop colonies and ships, and trade with other players – opening up new possibilities BREAKTHROUGH UPLINKS: Set up powerful chat links with other players, allowing you to share valuable data with allies and enemies alike CRAFT AND SCIENCE: Choose from a wide variety of ships, ships weapons, and ship upgrades, and enhance your colony with powerful buildings BONUS FEATURES: Hidden achievements, in-depth character profiles, the ability to play as specific factions and empires, and more! What else can I do to improve my empire? What else can I see in this game? Spoiler: For quite a while now I've been using Open Sidewalls as an economic proxy for hyperlanes in my economy based games. There's a reason this method works, but it does require some knowledge of the underlying mechanic to really take full advantage.Having a more modern explanation of this design is (of course) better, and since it's the type of thing I enjoy, I'm going to add these to the blog. One of the things that bothers me about our current civilization systems is that I think they encourage a flavor of over-planning to take advantage of them and I feel like this is a much better alternative: Instead of making you plan perfectly and then punishing you for not living up to it, give you plenty of things to do with one of these. The best part is that your economy as a whole doesn't really matter - you can still have a punishing economy with high taxes, good guilds c9d1549cdd

10:00 PM GMT 27 Nov 2015 Publish date: 27 Nov 2015 We have completed the Labyrinth of the Mad and are moving to the PvP phase! Players that join the game between now and the PvP phase will receive 30 days of experience. Official site: Why PvP - Have you ever wanted to see what your friends or enemies would do? - Would you like to fight over who gets to be the one who kills the last one? - Why not both at the same time? Our PvP matches will involve the players getting to the maximum amount of points within time. Points are awarded on a balance scale and our rules stipulate that players who get close to each other can choose to fight one another. Fighting happens only if no one else wants to get it done. If you'd like to join the battle, the queue is here: Current status Lobby Scheduling PvE and PvP progress Type: Storyline (1) Q: Is PvE progressing? (2) Q: Why do the enemies keep coming? (3) Q: Why does the labyrinth persist? (4) Q: What exactly is the Labyrinth of the Mad? (5) Q: When will the Labyrinth of the Mad be completed? Q: When is the Labyrinth of the Mad going to be completed? (1) PvE is scheduled to be completed by next patch. (2) The enemies come as a balancing measure to ensure that the world never becomes too easy. (3) You can't remove the labyrinth without destroying the planets of the past and present, preventing us from pushing the story further. (4) The labyrinth acts

Ever: A chat with Shyama Desai, legendary Game Designer You can find caves and tunnels, but they are not one of the author's favourite to play. Image Credit: Eric Barrie/GamesBeat As one of the founders of original puzzle-RPGs like Ganz Rockets and RainyWindgames (and its successor Raygun Runaway), legendary designer Shama Desai is well familiar with the gaming industry. But it's not always all about great, fun games; sometimes, you've got to create some of the most difficult dungeons of all time. And that means her days as a kid where she would turn on the TV to watch nothing but Diff'rent Strokes are a bit of a long time ago. GamesBeat asked her if she'd be willing to share her war stories about Hard Boss, one of the world's hardest dungeon games ever… GamesBeat: So, tell me about the genesis for this concept. Shama Desai: I think it was more along the lines of sitting around the table and deciding what kind of game we would make. It started as a side thing, something that we could just make for fun. I thought it would probably go better if there was something like this happening in the industry, where you can just make a dungeon. There isn't really anything like that. You've got roguelikes, but those are all over the map. You've got a lot of the roguelikes that are being like made today. I thought of making it more like if we made a platformer, where you run around and jump over all these obstacles, but I didn't want it to be platform-based, like Bionic Commando. I was looking for something that was more like a really difficult game, where you could play and die several times in a session and that was really fun. And so it started. I wrote this initial premise for a dungeon, and then everyone else joined in to add their ideas. How hard can you make these kinds of dungeons? Can you just build towers and cannonballs around you? What about things like tentacles? Can you make your enemies attack each other? As people joined in, things started to get kind of crazy. But what started out being like "here's something that we could make," ended up being
