Basically when clicking on the a tag it should print b on the screen, but it prints out this error: TypeError: addEventListener() for attribute 'onclick' of element 'a' is not a function. I tried to read the javascript documentations about DOM elements and events, but still can not find a solution for my problem. function TypeError: Cannot set property 'innerHTML' of null and also check that you are picking up the item you want to target. Or use also just document.querySelector("#myelement") instead of getElementById() for better performance as document.querySelector is supposed to be faster. Baskets have long been used to transport items. Baskets typically have a pair of handles for carrying. Oftentimes a pair of baskets are nested within each other, in which the handle of a nested basket is located within the handle of the other nested basket. However, the handles of the nested baskets can become tangled, thereby preventing the nested baskets from being moved easily. In addition, the handles of the nested baskets take up unnecessary storage space.
