More about Tarnished Armor:

Costume Development: A player changes their character's appearance by selecting pieces of armor and equipping them. The areas of the body selected determine the kind of shapes worn on the armor, and the character's custom settings make it easy to search for or assemble a total of up to 22 pieces to put on. Each piece of the armor can be altered freely by equipping the special mods found throughout the game. In other words, the pieces don't cost any more to upgrade than the level at which you are making them.

Character Equipping: The maximum amount of armor pieces that can be equipped at one time remains at 10, but if you want a leather cuirass or some other armor that allows equipment types that are not normally shared among classes, you can acquire them from the item shop. When you equip an item, you earn a specific item as a reward. Items that are sent as recompense vary depending on the stats of the character you are equipping.

Combat Ability: Players can advance through life levels and specialize their characters in the order Combat, Magic, or Arts. You can only use only certain types of items and special buffs if they are required in the battle. A battle ends when the stamina of a character drops below a certain percentage and the battle becomes a deadlock with zero HP left. You can avoid such a situation by spending stamina on the attack. This attack can be used directly in any form of battle; it does not have a condition specified in terms of Stamina or other conditions such as any form of buffs.

Skills: Skills are acquired by leveling up the character, and each skill serves to a certain attribute. Up to four skills can be used, and these skills provide buffs according to the current attributes of each character. Even if the skill gauge cannot exceed the capacity, you can absorb the skills' attributes by consuming their skill points. Skills can be turned on
