Q: Question about my take on the routine proof for FOS to security parameter s In the proof of the EOS scheme (Goldreich 2006, exercise 3.2.12.2) given in Polacheck (2011, exercise 16.7.4.4) the author asks us to elaborate on why the introduction of random oracle calls (and thus the removal of the oracle from the construction) will lead to a stronger security analysis. I feel like the author seems to be saying that the probability of us being in a distinguisher's queries might be affected, but I'd like to know if I'm missing something. I am skimming through the paper Polacheck presents and I am just trying to understand (since he didn't spell it out in the original challenge). I have that for some key pair (R,E), where R is a random oracle, the SIDH construction will construct a function $F(x,b) \in \{0,1\}^*$, and $E = g^F(1^F)$ is given by a squaring process where g is some private key: $F_1 = g'(x)$ For $i \ge 1$: $F_i = F_{i-1}^{g^i(x)} \text{ where } g^i = g \ast g \ast \ldots \ast g$ is concatenation of i copies of g And the question the author seems to be asking us is how the fact that $g^i(x)$ is run through a random oracle and then F_i is run through that oracle, affects the probability of the distinguisher being in a random oracle call, and concluding that we are given E at least once in some given search space. Also, I am confused how the answer the author

====== blaines What are the appeal of this game? I get Pokemon Go, it's a nice nostalgia trip for the 90s, but what about it is appealing that draws me back after only seeing a trailer? ~~~ recturn Dunno, seems pretty cool. The world seems quite big. ------ sinistersnare A game for the NPC generations as much as the player generations. Loads of characters along the lines of: Yoda, Obi-wan, Obi-wan, Anakin, Anakin. Villain/hero for each character / Plinko is 'Arcade', and all the other games are similarly 'Games'. Player Generation(s) play 'Pursue the Force' with Yoda(s). Ref: [I like how this game seems to carry the concept of 'drop in / drop out' engagement from previous iterations. ~~~ AznHisoka That game of plinko is an addictive game. I would eat the coin if given the chance. ------ jksnider I'm interested in what made them choose this style of monetization over the standard packaged goods addictive nature. ~~~ mikeyouse Yes. As a former deeply-interested player of mobile games, this goes way back to the App Store/Google Play era. Either a cool concept or an in-app purchase (or both) drove the final bit of engagement. "DRM" stopped those pretty quick though, so now you have to pay an annual subscription for 'unlimited' usage. Even then, I'd say the game supports 500 sessions a year at _most_. ~~~ tluyben2 The Pokemon Go pill. ------ larrysalibra This is an emulator for older games. It doesn't seem to have a lot of content. How would you find a source of income when there aren't any large add ons to sell to fans? ~~~ switch007 The Pokémon Go-style games were largely based around the 'buy coins
