At first, the web-site, DanAaronLieberman.org, is pointing to a Dan Aaron Lieberman-page, but if you click on "dan ariely", you find the name Dan

Ariely, and if you click on "dan ariely download", you're pointed to a page where you can download the paper or lectures. You can also visit the following page: which mentions a number of papers published by the late Professor D Alexandrou (something like a Greek version of "Google Scholar" that includes many papers by his students, public affairs journalists, and former colleagues). On the other hand, some of the papers cited there appear to have been rejected for publication. "The econometric methods used to test for serial correlations â€". the econometric methods used to test for serial correlations" is the title of one such article. But when I tried to download it,

I got an "unknown file" error message. I think it may be another paper with the same title. Update: the same "unknown file" error occurs for the following article, "The serial correlation test for time series and multivariate time series:. And it can sometimes take a while. So, I searched the web for something else, and found this article "How to write an economic journal paper without an â€˜eâ€™ ". I appreciate the author's attempt to have something to say, but I can see no real content in his article. It also makes a nonsense of the web-page's title, which is "How to write an economic journal paper without an â€˜eâ€™ ". Anyway, I wouldn't trust website titles and web-site links with "the econometric methods used to test for serial correlations" as a title, but "the econometric methods used to test for serial correlations in un 1cdb36666d
