no clip board command yet. A: The text of the clipboard is a string, not the contents of the clipboard itself. A consequence of this is that if you have a string and try to call `string.copy()`, then you get an error. The `string.copy()` call (and all other string methods) returns a new string representing the copied content of the clipboard. If you want to know what the clipboard contains, you'll need to use the Windows API to get the contents of the clipboard. I know python and I recall seeing a library called `win32clipboard` or something like that. The documentation seems very useful. Q: .NET Core Empty constructor My goal is to configure middleware using dependency injection in ASP.NET Core. I am trying to pass in some data into a constructor in a class but am getting an exception thrown. My Startup.cs contains `services.AddTransient(serviceProvider());` The MyClass class has `MyClass(IMyClassDataProvider provider);` public class `MyClassDataProvider { private readonly IEnumerable _dataSource; public MyClassDataProvider(IEnumerable dataSource) { _dataSource = dataSource; } }` MyClass class is defined as `class MyClass { private readonly IMyClassDataProvider _dataProvider; public MyClass(IMyClassDataProvider dataProvider) { _dataProvider = dataProvider; } }` and a dummy `MyClassData` class was defined as `class MyClassData { public int Id { get; set; } public string Name { get; set; } }` My implementation using this pattern failed to initialize: `MyClass c = new MyClass(new MyClassDataProvider(new List()));` I was expecting it to be able to successfully pass in a list of `MyClassData` to the `MyClass` constructor but it fails with the following exception:

`System.InvalidOperationException : No parameterless constructors defined for this object`
