Pregnancy reduces the plasma concentration of the lipophilic nonglycosylated form of alpha-fetoprotein in the rat. The influence of pregnancy on the distribution of alpha-fetoprotein (AFP) in rats was studied by measuring the plasma concentration of the lipophilic nonglycosylated AFP (AGP) in liver and plasma using a sensitive assay. The concentration of AGP in the plasma of 20 day pregnant rats was approximately 45% of the concentration in virgin females (P less than 0.01). The data suggest that pregnancy is associated with changes in the concentration of AFP in the maternal plasma and liver. Use of a polyurethane extended-release matrix to extend PTH2-PTHrP-(1-34) delivery. PTH2-PTHrP-(1-34) was encapsulated into an extended-release polymeric hydrogel via an alginate-polyurethane reaction. In vitro release of the drug was studied in phosphate buffer at pH 7.4, and subsequent cytotoxicity was evaluated in vitro on MG63 cells. The ability of the PTH2-PTHrP-(1-34) incorporated hydrogels to sustain release of PTH2-PTHrP-(1-34) was evaluated in vivo for 28 days. The percent release of the drug from these hydrogels remained more than 50% for the first 24 h. It was concluded that these scaffolds could sustain drug release at a high release rate for 28 days. The in vitro data showed that the drug was cytotoxic to MG63 cells but not to primary human osteoblast-like cells. The in vivo test showed that the bone effects of the drug were sustained up to 28 days without the need of additional surgery. by his apparent willingness to lie to Congress or by documents he sought to conceal on his computer and by how they were tied to cybersecurity company CrowdStrike's technology.
