Metal Heads is a turn based, board game, not a card game, with game play that is reminiscent of Mario Party and developed by a small Indie game studio, Varey Studio. Players control a character that moves around a board collecting various powerups and coins that turn specific square on the board, which causes a metaling or fighty effect. The player can collect powerups such as speed up's and turn on powerups, like invincibility. Players then have the ability to interact with other characters by playing events, unique to the game. Players can play events, such as a Metal Ring, that spawns a ring around the board. The player then has the ability to play into the ring, which can let players retrieve coins, add new boards, or can cause a special event for the player. The game itself is played over 3 rounds, with each round lasting 5 rounds, with each round being played until a player has become the winner. Introducing the three S's: *Skills, *speed and *sounds * There are no skills involved, but each player is able to choose his or her character class that changes the coins, powerups, the board, which will affect the gameplay and potentially the powerups and coins that are acquired throughout the game. These classes are available to players throughout the game, but change with each round and will become more powerful at the end of the game. Speed up's are used throughout the game to speed up players and actions around the board, they can also be used to enable certain powerups to become active. Each player also has the ability to collect powerups, and though they can be earned throughout the game, there are multiple collectable powerups to collect, which can change the landscape of the board. You can choose to collect powerups in any order that you wish. For example, you can collect a speed up, then later in the game collect a speed down to slow down the board. This can be a fun way to collect powerups and the powerups in the game are earned throughout the game. Sounds have a critical role in game play, as in many of the board games, the powers that players have to use can be used, and reacted to, by players. For example, using a powerup that gives players invincibility is an important thing to know when played in coordination, and sounds are also a critical part of the gameplay, as the characters move around the board, and you will come

All players start their game in the current time of the Second World War. The goal of the game is to survive as long as possible. Players are no longer in the uniform of the armed forces. Players need to make choices and find appropriate solutions that allow them to survive for a long period of time. The original design concept of the game is to allow for quick turn-based battles over a number of days in the same environment. The core of the story is the development of the player character and his inner, psychological change. During the course of the game, players will develop relationships with other survivors. They will get to know players who will become heroes and villains. The game will have different scenarios, each in its own context. The player will choose what to do and it may have consequences. The reality of the game is based on existing ideas. It is not a far-fetched story. Much of the game takes place in real locations and even real characters.
