Q: Do you use z-index with your navigation bar? I do like to have a bar that runs through the page containing the logo, links and navigation, but then I like to have the logo/navigation to be on top and on the right, and I tried using a z-index of 150 to force it, but it didn't seem to work. Can anyone provide any help? Here is a screen cap of what I have so far: A: The only way to do this is with z-index if you have no control over the box that contains it and the box is after you in the document. the simplest way to solve it is to put the nav bar into another div with no z-index and just put that in a container and set the container to have a z-index of the one you want. so the html would be something like this: //nav bar //nav bar content // content // foot
