This study examines the effect of bioflocculant aeration on enhanced methane yield (E.M.Y) of anaerobic digestion (AD) of sugarcane-waste liquor. Initially, the flocculation of sugarcane-waste liquor from manual stirring and mechanical stirring methods were assessed. The optimal flocculation was observed with the mechanical stirring method. Further, air-sparging improved the process over chemical aeration. A mathematical model, COMBO, to predict E.M.Y based on a reaction kinetics approach was developed. The model was applied to describe E.M.Y of a series of plug-flow reactors to compare the performance of aeration strategies. To protect the environmental assets, a life cycle assessment (LCA) approach was carried out. The inputs and outputs were determined to estimate carbon footprint of the process. The results show that the end product of flocculation has a potential to lower the carbon footprint to 30% of the currently practiced conventional system. The maximum E.M.Y was achieved with anaerobic-aerobic sequential digestion system with 10% biofloccul

The lack of access to quality health care in the United States has led to the passage of reform initiatives seeking to improve access to care and to restore the essential core value of the health care system as "a right of all persons to a level of health care that meets the everyday health care needs of the population." These reforms and the passage of health care reform legislation in the United States are followed by a degree of panic among the physician community as well as those who may be impacted by these reforms. My goal is to inform the reader that the government of the United States will not eliminate or reduce the essential core values of the health care system (government responsibility to protect the vulnerable populations, cost containment, and cost-effective care) as provided in the United States constitution. To the contrary, the reforms enacted in recent years seek to strengthen the values that are essential to protect the well-being and health of the population and not to weaken them. It is essential that physician leaders speak truth to power and that physician leaders educate and advocate for the well-being and health of the populace. The physician community must work together, avoid turf battles, and advocate for the values and principles that are at the foundation of the health care system. Investigations into the management of substance abuse in prison patients. The majority of inmates in correctional facilities suffer from substance-abuse related problems, including polysubstance dependence. These patients can benefit from evidence-based clinical and pharmacotherapeutic interventions, but they have several barriers to successful treatment, including ambivalence about treatment, length of incarceration, and imprisonment in general. Other barriers include (a) the correctional system's unique features of administration of care by medication as a substitute for face-to-face care, (b) lack of mental health expertise, and (c) limited access to primary care due to the lack of physician involvement. This article will review approaches to the assessment and treatment of substance-use disorders among inmates.[Prevalence of IgG antibodies to Chlamydia trachomatis in chronic urogenital infections]. We determined the presence of antibodies to Chlamydia trachomatis in the sera of the infected and uninfected patients using the micro-immunofluorescence (MIF) test. The second part of the study was directed at determining the diagnostic value of this test. The results of the study showed that 78% of the patients had a detectable titre of Chlamydia trachomatis antibodies in their sera, with an average titre of 1/128 +/- 0.4, which was significantly higher than in the uninfected controls (p less than 0.001). The specificity of the MIF test was 96%, sensitivity 91%. The study confirms the current views that chronic urogenital infections are caused by Chlamydia trachomatis.Q: Button disappears in the middle of the view when rotated I have a button in my view that I want to animate by rotating it 90° by using RotateTransition.
