Ocean Flow in a Biased Frictional Couette Flow Driven by a Microfluidic Chip Actuator
Author Institution: Department of Chemical Engineering and Material Science, Concordia University, Montreal, Quebec, Canada
Abstract: This study presents a portable microfluidic system for actuating channel flow with flow rate, pressure and composition sensing capabilities. The design of this portable microfluidic system consists in a single electro-wetting on dielectric (EWOD) microfluidic chip with integrated capacitive sensors to detect the flow rate, pressure and composition of the flow media. To illustrate the suitability of this chip-based flow actuator, the flow topography associated with this device has been studied and compared to that of the well-known Frictional Couette flow for the same driving flow conditions and laboratory-scale dimensions. The Frictional Couette flow was investigated at various Reynolds numbers and compared to EWOD's flow topography for the same driving conditions. The results obtained on the relative flat zone of each flow indicate that the EWOD pattern is smoother than the Frictional Couette flow. Moreover, it appears that EWOD acts as efficient pumping scheme for low pressure applications.

The Lion's Song - Soundtrack Crack + X64 [Updated-2022]

Action-packed sci-fi 3D RPG with deep story driven gameplay and elements from X-COM and over-the-top, action-packed shooter games As a sort of deep sequel to the popular 2007 game "The Lion's Song" - with only superficial changes in the graphics, structure and content - the new game is interesting not only for the action, but also for the story. The game takes place in a time where mankind has nearly lost its previous civilization, and is now living in clans on surface worlds that survive in precarious conditions. The game features five worlds with different ecosystems and climate, and a deadly struggle between the humans and the super-intelligent, super-strong and super-fast, enigmatic Edens. The main characters are, of course, the clan leaders, and some of them are easily identified as the respective X-Com teams from the previous game. The main gameplay characteristics are: - large variety of weapons and items of varying technical and tactical properties; - plan your action on the map, build your location and set up your base with the most appropriate building; - multi-character team formation; - a deep storyline with an interactive story-line, interesting characters and a rich visual presentation. What is new in this game: This Game Contains Full-length Original Soundtrack Get ready to experience an original action-packed sci-fi soundtrack made of various audio tracks in various cinematic themes - totaling more than four hours of original music. The soundtrack was compiled by most of the original game's composers in the course of several months, and contains original compositions, remixes, and fan-made tracks. Story Line: In a very distant future mankind has nearly lost its civilization, and is now living on surface worlds that survive in precarious conditions. The five worlds of the game are called "Moons" and they differ in their ecosystems and climatic conditions. They are clearly characteristic in how they develop, and range from ice-covered, icy, and windy worlds to the ones that are tropical and hot. The life on these worlds is varied, and there are organic and artificial life forms that exist and thrive in these hostile environments. The Edens are another important part of this game and they are the main antagonists. They represent the typical sci-fi, alien or mega-corporation villains and are clearly identifiable as a derivative of two classic characters: The Mega Corp - a small, well-organized and evil corporation with d41b202975

What's new:

Official Synopsis Scene One 2011. The farm of Lumu and Rotimi Adegoke, near Enugu in central Nigeria, is experiencing a period of prosperity. 2011. An array of bright stars greet me on a long and moonlit night. I feel drawn back to Africa the more I take in its beauty, exploring in my mind the possibilities of writing a film on Igbo origin myths set in modern Africa. Somewhere in this maelstrom of artistic possibilities could be the embodiment of my desire to bring the African diaspora back to the centre of its storytelling. Scene Two Lumu and his two sons, Abegbe (19) and Tarafa (13), welcome me into their modest home. Abegbe is a mechanic who uses diesel to power his car, while Tarafa is an energetic young schoolboy who is desperate to be a footballer. Abegbe and Tarafa live on the adjacent farm with their new family. Together, they share the circle of life, their mothers young and old, two daughters and a son. The older generation show me the ancestral mud blocks where the family's three villages once stood (Kroum, Nnewi, Egbado), gifts that symbolise the peace they have forged with the land. The foundation of Abegbe and Tarafa's farm (Mni, near the river) is Npe, the highest mountain in the region, full of game, including elephants. The men relax outside the house enjoying their pipes, while the women prepare chicken and maize stew with onions, a traditional dish. Inside the house, Tarafa tells me about taking part in the Nigerian Football Federation tournament, which has given him an opportunity to meet Nwankwo Kanu, a star of the Benin national team, and Arouna Kone, a West African star. Mud is everywhere: as incongruous as the bright stars in the sky is the black mud of the Nsukka River, which borders this idyllic farm and the neighbouring Eley Orji farm, and flows past Lumu's homestead. Photo: Wodian Akinyemi, production designer I discuss the theme of ikin (primordial, or ancestral), which is integral to Lumu's depiction of his past and present. Scene Three A memory: as a child, Lumu went on
