This means that NS::f(); is wrong. You want something more like NS::f(NS::f()); Q: Clojure: Why is % (mod) considered "dangerous"? The % (mod) function can be used in Clojure to calculate the remainder of an integer after dividing by another integer. I know of at least two ways to calculate the modulo of an integer x by n, and they both use the same definition: (mod x n) ≡ (x * y)%n ≡ (x *
