Weight gain is common among patients with asthma. However, it is not known whether weight gain is associated with poor asthma control or corticosteroid therapy after asthma diagnosis. To evaluate the association between weight gain during the first year after asthma diagnosis and corticosteroid therapy at the first visit and subsequent asthma-related hospital admissions. Nationally representative sample of 2181 adult patients with physician-diagnosed asthma using insurance claims data from the Health and Retirement Study. Weight gain was defined as a change of 1 or more standard deviation (SD) in weight at 1 year after diagnosis and compared with weight change of less than 1 SD. Corticosteroid therapy within 2 years of asthma diagnosis (defined by a prescription claim for an inhaled corticosteroid with a drug class code for a corticosteroid indication of OCS_COPD) and subsequent asthma-related hospital admissions (defined by an inpatient claim for asthma during follow-up) were evaluated. The analysis included 36% of patients with asthma (n=734). Weight change of 1 or more SD was
