Salinas told "Early Edition" host Jane Velez-Mitchell that she was having time to spend with Hadid's mom, Yolanda, before she headed to the hospital on Monday. "I think Gigi could be here now, but as of right now, her heart is the most important thing," Salinas said. Izzie was also on hand with Hadid's family. 's been saying for months that the current regimen of vaccines is not enough," said Lesli Rotenberg, an associate clinical professor of pediatrics at Seattle Children's Hospital. "Maybe we are getting closer to delivering on that." But Rotenberg doubts that the U.S. or any country will ever fully protect its children from measles. Measles cases were already down significantly in 2015 compared to 2014, when the disease made a comeback in Washington. In early April, there were 10 cases reported in the U.S., many imported from countries where the disease was more prevalent than in the U.S. Sabin's Vaccine Research Institute and the Fred Hutchinson Cancer Research Center are developing a new vaccine that includes one of the newer measles virus vaccine strains combined with the measles-rubella vaccine. The resulting vaccine had encouraging results in the animal studies. "You can vaccinate animals and do quite good that way, but that's not the same as vaccinating humans," said Sabin's Dr. Robert Chen, one of the researchers involved in developing the vaccine. When Chen and his colleagues tested the new vaccine on 1,000 monkeys in Madagascar, about 40 percent were protected against the measles virus. In addition to the new vaccine that would require fewer shots to protect against both measles and rubella, Chen said the older vaccine could be made even safer and more potent by including only the currently available live measles virus in the vaccine, rather than using a live virus vaccine and a killed virus vaccine. "It's a much safer vaccine," Chen said. The new vaccine has been tested in animals for more than 20 years and is already on the market in France, Germany and Sweden. In one of the earliest studies, more than 96 percent of infants aged 15 to 23 months in Cambodia, Indonesia, and France were protected from measles after receiving three shots of the vaccine. The only catch was that protection lasted for only about five years.
