The drivers apparently got everything they wanted and more. On Dec. 23, city school district officials released a new Collective Bargaining Agreement that they say includes the new pension and health plan for bus drivers. The new contract's retroactive provisions give all drivers who've been working for the past four years about $50,000 in back pay. The district also agreed to upgrade the pensions of all the drivers, and the drivers who've been working a year or less will now receive a 25% annual wage increase each of the next four years. Other changes in the agreement include a $3,500 bonus for drivers who work a full year without a single day off, new health-care requirements for retirees and an improved procedure for drivers who leave their jobs. "Once we were given these benefits, I said, 'It's no contest. We're going back to work,'" said driver Rick Anderson, who was waiting in line to retrieve his paycheck from the city's payroll system on Dec. 23. Drivers participated in the initial strike in October, which was highly disruptive for many city families. While the strike was scheduled to last for only one month, it went on for more than two. Two weeks ago, they voted to continue striking indefinitely. Gov. John Kasich signed a bill that ended the first strike. But it didn't end the second one. "The drivers were kept on strike until we got everything we Methylmercury is preferentially accumulated in basal ganglia and related nuclei of monkeys. Mercury is a potent neurotoxin and MeHg can readily cross the blood-brain barrier, reaching concentrations of 10 to 100 times higher in the brain than in blood. To study the distribution of mercury, we have used a non-invasive and quantitative autoradiographic technique for the mapping of brain regions that are thought to contain high levels of mercury (the corpus striatum, globus pallidus, and substantia nigra) in the brains of Rhesus monkeys after intravenous [14C]MeHqCl injections. The high amounts of mercury found in these nuclei are functionally related to the movement disorders that are characteristic of mercury intoxication. 6d1f23a050
