Field of the Invention This invention generally relates to a convertible infant carrier for mounting inside a vehicle. More specifically, the invention relates to an infant seat which is easy to assemble and disassemble while mounted in the vehicle, and which readily and easily conforms to the available space of the vehicle in which it is used. 2. Description of the Prior Art Convertible infant carriers have been available for several decades. Their purposes have ranged from commercial portable, pop-out jogging strollers to safety vehicles designed for parents to use with their young children while shopping. One aspect of these carriers that has remained constant in the design and utility of the carriers is the importance of providing a seating arrangement that can be conveniently used by the child within the vehicle. However, the provision of seating arrangements, or seats, for use by infants of varying ages has been limited to typical infant carriers. For example, U.S. Pat. No. 4,573,724 issued on Mar. 18, 1986 to Davis shows a seating arrangement for an infant carrier, which is stationary and does not pop out of the carrier. A seat member is provided which is secured in the back of the carrier. A seat and harness assembly is attached to the seat member and the harness is used for support of the infant within the carrier. U.S. Pat. No. 4,294,539 issued on Oct. 13, 1981 to Pohl shows an infant carrier which has an enclosure, which encloses the child therein. The enclosure is configured for the weight of the child to be supported by the enclosure. The enclosure is attached directly to the infant carrier and is not moveable relative to the infant carrier. U.S. Pat. No. 4,776,594 issued on Oct. 11, 1988 to Ritchey shows a convertible jogging stroller and infant carrier combination. A base member defines a seat portion, is moveable relative to the base member c6a93da74d
