creating rpf files from 3d scenes involves several steps, as previously described. usually, this process uses three separate outputs: one main file, plus a frame file and a mask file. imagechannelmaskfiles also often comes with an.ico file. depending on how the.rpf file was created, you might be able to extract more information. some of the most often used rpf files, such as those from threeds max, can usually be opened with the default 3ds max file viewer. however, you may need to open the file with another viewer, depending on the file's format. some rpf files include data that can be examined with a file browser like es explorer. here, the contents of an rpf file's frame and image channel files can be viewed at their individual physical file locations. question: why does the function play() always returns 0answer: certain animations have play animations, in which the animation cycles, replaying the same frames multiple times. this is done to allow for smoother changes in speed and not lagging your game and animation breaks. this time, we use a modified version of the step from section: "the data of the game file is encrypted". to create your own.ytd file, you have to follow the instructions in section: "custom creations with and without the technical support of rockstar". to avoid problems with the loader, the sections that do not contain cutscene data or needed user data should not contain chapters like an intro or a credits section. here we are at the end! the installation of a new car is complete. openiv will now be able to find your modified files automatically (c:\users\[your name]\documents\rockstar games\grand theft auto v\[the game folder]).
