when i experimented with the maestro controllers in a toyota prius, i found that i could not use the controls for the car's speakers. i could only play the radio station via the head unit and not the speakers. the maestro controllers can be used for the most part to control a car's audio system, but i would not recommend using them for the most important functions. it is best to use the head unit's controls for volume and eq and to use the maestro controllers only for setting the volume. of course, if you can control the audio system with the maestro controllers, you can control your media players with the maestro controllers, but i have found that i have to be careful with this approach since there are differences between the sound settings on different media players. the maestro controllers are still very handy for listening to your car's media players via the head unit. i have also used the controllers to control my ipod and iphone with the maestro head unit. but in the end, i prefer to use the head unit's buttons for volume, eq, and other controls, so i prefer to use the maestro controllers for the less important functions of setting the volume and eq. but before you decide to use the maestro controllers, you should know that they are not a high-end product. the device is very simple and does not have much in the way of storage, so i would keep them around in a drawer or file cabinet, just in case you ever need them. i have been a sound artist for a long time and have made many recordings and live performances in which i used electronics to create sound. so i have a lot of experience with electronics. but, i really want to get involved with making electronic equipment for the music community and supporting musicians.
