Sia Some People Have Real Problems Torrent

we are tired of the projects where siasetup talks about the future of skynet as though it is something that will be able to do all of the things that sia can do, but with more features, and where the project itself has failed to make such a distinction. we are tired of the projects where the project makes no attempts to explain to new users what sia is, what siasetup is, or what sia is capable of. we are tired of the projects that simply want us to give up our data so that they can make money off of it. we are tired of the projects that have made a promise, and then, when it was time to implement it, simply did not. we are tired of the projects that make promises that they can't keep, that will not deliver what they promised, and that have no ideas as to how to address these issues. we are tired of the projects that appear to be little more than a front-end to a centralized database, where all of the data that you put into the site is stored on someone else's server, and you have no visibility into where that data actually is. we are tired of the projects that try to pass themselves off as sia when they simply don't do any of the things that sia does. we have noticed that the core team has been vocal about how they don't speak with the community, and how they do not interact with the community and communicate with the community. our experience with the team has been that this is not true - the team is very responsive to the community, as can be seen in many cases where a significant amount of work was done by a community developer or volunteer to try and solve a specific issue or implement a feature. sometimes they will respond with some sort of "we'll get back to you in a couple weeks" or "i'll get back to you in a couple days", but they usually never do. we believe that they have been busy getting skynet up and running, and are trying to figure out how to monetize it, and don't have time to help with the development of sia. the developer team is a small group of volunteers who split their time between skynet and sia, and are not taking on any significant amount of work on either project unless they are given a specific task which they will carry out - they are not doing an even split of time between the two projects, and are unlikely to even care to do so. if you want to see development progress on sia, you need to be vigilant and look for an updated blog, a real-time update of one of the official channels (discord or blog), or a comment in one of the official channels from a team member, all of which are good places to look.

we may have been disappointed in sia before. but it's also given us a new appreciation for people who don't take what we say or anyone else's complains seriously. it's also given us a new appreciation for the free speech which we experience every day. we no longer believe that this free speech is as useful as a tool to make a profit as we once thought it to be. we're far happier to say what we think, and to witness this free speech in action. we'd much rather watch content be created and watched than try to make something which will actually be distributed instead of created. and yet, despite all of the above, despite not being able to produce regular blog posts or maintain a stable forum nor be reached via discord, despite the lack of a coherent architecture, a clear vision, and leadership and then lack of leadership as they change, sia and skynet are still one of the fastest growing projects with the highest adoption rate of any cryptocurrency. they are still one of the largest decentralized storage networks, and have the number two rank on the lemon fork network . they have seen transactions of over $40 million in the last year and a half, with >$50 million projected for 2018 alone. they're no longer free and open source, are charging for some version of bandwidth - which is what dns was originally designed for, after all. but despite not having a clear vision, management team, or governance structure, they have apparently been able to produce a product which has been utilized by a global userbase over the last year and a half. all of this despite these problems. we suspect that this is because most of the problems have been presented as individual problems and attacks in order to benefit the business. individual users know that they might be impacted by any one of these, but the community as a whole is unaware of what the real issues are. to us, this makes the experiment a failure on all levels. 5ec8ef588b
