When a pilot engages a trainee, that student must complete the same training as a regular pilot. A pilot must also complete the same training whether he/she is a pilot training, a flight instructor, or a flight examiner. The pilot may be a trainee to a company or may be an airline pilot. Many pilot training centers or schools operate a pilot training organization, which includes two or more pilot training centers or schools located at different locations. At least one pilot training school is located at each company facility. Each pilot training school is associated with an aviation company, such as a major airline or a flight academy. Some companies contract with two or more pilot training schools or centers, depending on the number of employees to be trained. For example, FIG. 1 shows a pilot training organization 100 that includes three pilot training centers or schools 102, 104, and 106. Pilot training center 102 is located at an airline facility 110, pilot training center 104 is located at an airline facility 120, and pilot training center 106 is located at an airline facility 130. Companies contract with pilot training schools or centers based on the number of employees they expect to have to train. For example, a company may contract with two pilot training schools or centers for two pilots or with three pilot training schools or centers for a pilot and two flight instructors. In the pilot training organization of FIG. 1, three pilot training centers are located at airline facilities 110, 120, and 130, which are associated with companies 102, 104, and 130, respectively. During the training period of a pilot, each pilot training school or center provides a training program for the pilot. Pilots from different pilot training centers or schools are supposed to receive the same training. However, with a large number of employees to be trained, this becomes difficult. Some pilot training schools or centers are located far away from the airline facilities. This can cause a problem when an employee is to be trained because of the distance and time it takes to reach a training center. Therefore, there exists a need for methods and systems for facilitating the training of pilots./* -----
