I'd recommend it to a friend who either needs to do extensive retouching of their own images, or has limited time to devote to that reworking project. And I'd recommend it to anyone who wants to experiment with various Photoshop skills – like design and typography, or an ability to paint 100% realistically. For those of you who have been following the various Lightroom 5 review articles, you will know that this review is pretty much "off topic" for this one. If you are looking for an in-depth review of Lightroom 5, check out the MakeUseOf one . Still, if you are looking for my personal and subjective thoughts, I have few and stand clear. I like the new version. Other than a few glitches with the sync, when bits of something go missing or can't be found: image-textual clarification issues, and custom SLR lenses, I like the new look. I also now have another opportunities to look at my Canon's raw files – something I've been wanting for some time. One big-ticket problem with Lightroom 4 is still there in the new release: the ground doesn't look as good as it does in real life. I do see some improvement when it comes to photos taken in low light, but, to me, it's still a struggle to get the highest quality from the software. Furthermore, I do not find the colours on the view of a JPEG much better than in Lightroom 4. The biggest irritant, however, is that when the Colors screen is open, there is first and only a quick look at the transitions going on, then you get to the dialog box to access the hotspots – these are tiny and very quickly "collapse" when you pause your work. This is of course especially annoying when trying to position and position, an area of your work that you want to lock. In short, while everything does stay synchronized between iPhone and Mac, selecting and previewing what needs to be done on the Mac is an irritation rather than a suggested workflow solution. This really irked me when I first played with the new version – I uninstalled it. No, I don't want to go back to Lightroom 4. Rest assured though, if you are not feeling bothered by whatever big-ticket issue Lightroom has, you will not be either by Lightroom 5.
