"Fillon and the others want to impose upon us an economic shock therapy that will kill off the French economy," Le Pen told supporters at a rally in the eastern town of Beauvais. "Macron wants to impose on us a political shock therapy without offering anything as a solution, as a means of response. "He wants to tell us that there's an alternative to the way things have been done," Le Pen said, referring to the former investment banker who launched his own party, En Marche, in January. "I want to be the guarantor of our economy and our national identity," Le Pen said. I created the object in the TypeScript generated code and it's been working fine (and it was being used by my Angular controller to create an array of specific objects). Now I'm using the functionality of javascript and the array object is still working in the system, but one of the new objects doesn't work. I've tried doing this (and removing it when the TypeScript code generated this code: testObj.actionString = a.actionString; for (const a in a) { testObj[a.replace("ESPINEAPI_","")] = a; } and I'm finding that the a.replace doesn't work. It seems that either a or a.replace is undefined, but I'd expect those variables to be statically defined. I have also tried doing the same with ES6/Babel's let variable (where a is defined in the function): let a; for (let a in a) { testObj[a.replace("ESPINEAPI_","")] = a; } and I'm finding the same errors. "Cannot read property'replace' of undefined" "Cannot access 'a.replace' of undefined" The issue seems to be in the way that it is defined. A: You don't need ES6 in this case (from my point of view), you have an error in your code. If you want to set properties you would need to use [] instead of object. So what you have now is what you would have getted if you have done something like (pseudo-code). a = {}; a.actionString = '...'; If you are using ES6 you can use Object.assign(...) which you can use to create new objects, just not mutate existing objects. In this case you could do something like this let newObj = Object.ass 04aeff104c
