Adobe Sensei AI can recognize handwriting and type, and changes to the font, layout and other parts of a photo make a difference. Deep learning algorithms also recognize objects and shapes, so users can fix issues as they crop and adjust their photos, all with just a click. "Post-processing is often the most time-consuming part of the photography and video workflow," said Brian Keating, vice president, industry solutions, video, digital imaging and photo at Adobe. "And yet it's also the last step of the edit, and unless you've taken and saved the file, you can't bring that image back into the editing process until it's complete."
