I was looking at a MongoDB web based admin GUI and I noticed this at the top of the code: :var app_name = "app_name" :var app_version = "app_version" What is the purpose of :var? Is there a way to call it and put a value in? A: :var can be used to create internal constants. The syntax :var _key_ = _value_ can be used to generate constant values. Example: :var Foo = "bar" :echo Foo # prints bar The value can also be used in an embedded expression, such as Math.floor(Foo*10). Reference: A: If you do not include the var/set to a variable, then that is a constant. For example, you can do something like: :var MyNumber = 5 :echo MyNumber Which will print out "5". You can also do: :set MyNumber = 6 :echo MyNumber Which will print out "6". (Technically these will not work in the way you expect them to, but you can get around that by using parentheses, as below: (:set MyNumber = 6) (:echo MyNumber) Which will print out "6") Re: Best Power Savers (Revolt is your friend) Thanks, I'm going to look at that. Discovered by a seismologist in his mother-in-law's garden in 1984, some of the large Lusitanian caves are the largest known, spanning several kilometres. The largest of these, the Lusitanian cave of Cadoxao, is nearly 250km long. Since 2016 they have also started organising tours. Cadoxo's Characteristic The Lusitanian cave system is characterised by both its large size and because of its unusual geology. Most of the Lusitanian caves do not show any evidence of glaciation. The Tramuntana Mountains have been formed by epeirogenesis - an inglaciation of the Mediterranean sedimentary rock on a terrain with a continental origin - and the carbonate rock is a product of the marine transgression (superposition of a shallow sea over an alluvial plain with a thin sedimentary layer of marine sediments and lime and carbonate rocks). This makes the limestone matrix less resistant 79a2804d6b
