(SPTD V 1.81)Electric power generation with fuel cells has become a focus of attention in recent years because they are clean, highly efficient, and can be used for automobiles and electric power storage, for example. The fuel cell includes a fuel electrode, an oxidant electrode, a membrane-electrode assembly (MEA) having these electrodes, and a separator sandwiched and held between the electrodes of the

MEA. The MEA is a structure made by sandwiching a polymer electrolyte membrane between the fuel electrode and the oxidant electrode. An example of a polymer electrolyte membrane used in such a polymer electrolyte membrane fuel cell is a perfluorosulfonic acid ionomer. The MEA and separator are configured such that the MEA is sandwiched and held between a pair of separator plates, so that they are connected in series to form a stacking structure. The separator is an electroconductive metal plate
