In response to Republicans' closure of the government in a bid to prove that President Barack Obama's health care reforms could not pass Congress, HealthCare.gov released a new app that serves as a "community snapshot." Described as "an innovative tool for voters and analysts to see what individual citizens think," the new tool has a simple design that includes four questions about health care reform, including "If Congress approves health care reform, will it strengthen health care coverage or undermine it?" and the conditions will be almost identical to those of the past, the intensity of the present heatwave will result in unacceptably high death tolls and economic hardship. By contrast, the agenda of climate mitigation will not only bring the climate a few degrees further from the threshold of a human-dominated climate (which will itself be an adaptation), but also result in a huge shift of the climate away from the high-emissions and low-predictability scenario towards a more normal stable climate with lower variability. This normal climate will not only mean that the heatwaves of the future will not necessarily be as dire as today's, but also that there will not be future droughts, nor will there be floods that are as devastating as today's, nor will the sea level rise over the next century. Most of all, this means that all of us will continue to have water, food and a habitable planet to live on. The transition to a stable climate will be aided by the fact that the future climate will be more predictable, and we will have a greater understanding of the climate-weather nexus, as well as of the interplay between the complex and chaotic effects of the oceans and atmosphere, and the even more complex and chaotic effects of human activities. In the next century, natural variation in the ocean will be the biggest driver of climate change. However, the oceans are also the source of the heat we release to the atmosphere. It is not known what the climate of the oceans
